Meeting the Required Energy Codes: It's About More Than Just Insulation

In addition to the State Modular Building Label Programs and the Building Codes we told you about in our previous newsletters, the applicable version of the International Energy Conservation Code or IECC must be adhered to as well.

Combined these codes regulate the overall design of buildings installed in each state, regardless of whether the structure is site erected or prefabricated. These codes impact the design of your industrial building by determining not only what insulation values must be utilized, but in some cases the details of what types of electrical accessories are installed and what coatings must be used.

Do you know which version of the code applies to your project?

September Customer News

I will devote this message to a brief update on the impacts of Hurricanes Harvey and Irma. Thank you for your thoughts and concerns for our people, our business, and your projects. We have been in contact with all employees across both disasters and I am very happy to report all are safe. Our business located south of Houston did not experience flooding and all projects are secure at that facility.

The magnitude and back to back timing of these two storms is unprecedented. If you sustained damages to one of our previously provided buildings, please reach us to assist your team with the assessment of necessary repairs.
